

A S H capital

August 29, 2008

Dear Team Members:

With the recent departure of Mr. Randy Schroeder from Agel Enterprises, I thought it appropriate to state a few things for the record. We wish Mr. Schroeder all the best in his new venture but want to be sure there is absolute clarity when it comes to Ash Capital's position.

Comments have been made implying that Ash Capital and Agel are parting company. Let me just state in the clearest possible terms: this is absolutely false.

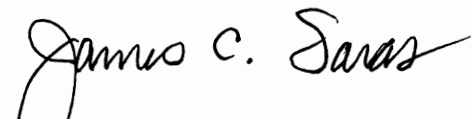

I have been a member of Agel's board of managers since Agel was founded and will continue to act in that capacity in the future. As a manager I participate in strategic business and financial decisions on a continual basis. Our firm has weekly contact with Glen Jensen and the executive team and we have every confidence in their leadership.

Allegations have also been circulated about Agel being in a precarious financial position. Again, these comments are unfounded.

Agel experienced their highest monthly revenues to date in the month of July and are poised to exceed that in August. As in any high growth company there are financial issues that arise and there are needs for additional capital. We continue to be committed to providing capital to the company if required.

In summary, Ash Capital is excited about the opportunities for Agel and its team members. We partnered with Agel before their initial product launch, have stood with them as they have continued to expand the business and stand ready to assist them in the future.

Warmest Regards,

James C. Savas
Managing Partner
